Aaron Marcus brings a diverse background to Weiss. After graduating from Princeton University, he obtained a Master of Education degree from Boston University. Aaron's first career was teaching high school and middle school at various private schools in Boston, Chicago, and Pittsburgh, the latter while his wife, a physician, completed a residency. Along the way, he graduated from Chicago-Kent College of Law and worked at a national consultancy where he focused on wealthy client services.

During the pandemic Aaron shifted his professional focus more to tax work. He completed the work necessary to be confirmed as an Enrolled Agent. He's delighted to be working at Weiss and looks forward to learning with and from his colleagues.

Outside of the office he and his wife enjoy travelling to national parks within the U.S., both with their three children and as a couple. Aaron's idea of a great getaway is to go for a hike in the wilderness and return to an outside porch where he can sit on a comfortable chair and read.
